

I support Net Neutrality and the Title 2 oversight of the ISPs. Without this, service providers can legally censor political ideas and sites, as well as prevent access to affordable internet access. Already, internet access is unattainable by many, due to cost, and the creation of 'fast lanes' just gives another excuse to charge more and more for something that has become an essential tool to function in today's society. Dismantling of Net Neutrality allows corporations to make the rules, and those rules have more to do with the bottom line and less to do with the people that pay for this important service. Under this decision, only those corporations will benefit.
